

STUDENT: What is consultant pharmacy mainly concerned with?

TEACHER: ⇨ medication regimen review

STUDENT: Where do a majority of consultant pharmacists tend to work?

TEACHER: ⇨ nursing homes

STUDENT: What are some large pharmacy management companies?

TEACHER: ⇨ Omnicare, Kindred Healthcare and PharMerica

STUDENT: What is the main reason consulting pharmacists are increasingly working directly with patients?

TEACHER: ⇨ because many elderly people are now taking numerous medications but continue to live outside of institutional settings

STUDENT: What do some community pharmacies do?

TEACHER: ⇨ employ consultant pharmacists and/or provide consulting services

STUDENT: What is consultant pharmacy not concerned with?

TEACHER: ⇨ CANNOTANSWER

STUDENT: Where do a minority of consultant pharmacists tend to work?

TEACHER: ⇨ CANNOTANSWER

STUDENT: What are some small pharmacy management companies?

TEACHER: ⇨ CANNOTANSWER

Section:Pharmacy13

Context: Consultant pharmacy practice focuses more on medication regimen review (i.e. "cognitive services") than on actual dispensing of drugs. Consultant pharmacists most typically work in nursing homes, but are increasingly branching into other institutions and non-institutional settings. Traditionally consultant pharmacists were usually independent business owners, though in the United States many now work for several large pharmacy management companies (primarily Omnicare, Kindred Healthcare and PharMerica). This trend may be gradually reversing as consultant pharmacists begin to work directly with patients, primarily because many elderly people are now taking numerous medications but continue to live outside of institutional settings. Some community pharmacies employ consultant pharmacists and/or provide consulting services. CANNOTANSWER

STUDENT: What is the secondary reason consulting pharmacists are increasingly working directly with patients?

TEACHER: ↪ CANNOTANSWER

STUDENT: What do no community pharmacies do?

TEACHER: ↪ CANNOTANSWER